

A wildflower welcome

SUBIACO Primary School Year 1 students recently took a break from their studies to plant a new wildflower garden at King Edward Memorial Hospital (KEMH).

Sustainable garden experts The Forever Project and KEMH Women and Infant Research Foundation helped the pint-size gardeners plant the native flowers at the hospital's facade.

The Forever Project director Chris Ferreira said he and partner Astrid Higgins were keen supporters of KEMH as their son River, now two-years-old, spent eight weeks in the neonatal intensive care unit when he was born nine weeks premature.

"WA wildflowers are renowned for being some of the most spectacular in the world and it's great to see them being recognised and planted at KEMH, one of WA's most historic hospitals," he said.
